

RomantiCon 2009

Historical Romance Panel

W elcome to the Historical Romance Panel at the first ever RomantiCon Readers Convention.

Of all the romance genres, historical romance writers tend to look more like lawyers on a deadline. Scratch that. Historical romance writing is so document-heavy that it makes lawyers look light-weight in comparison.

We can't possibly present everything about writing damn good historical romances in a thirty-five minute panel, before lunch, before the most eagerly sought-after bookfair of the year.

So we got crafty.

We'll do our best to tell you what we know before opening the floor to questions. Then we'll direct you to our specially built, RomantiCon 2009 Historical Romance Portal, that we've spent the last three weeks building just for you, just for this moment.

It's here:

We built this portal to cover everything we couldn't possibly cover on such a huge topic. What you'll find at the portal is a collection of categorized and annotated links to our favourite sites, articles, books and resources, of interest to readers and writers, on the subject of historical romances (both sweet and erotic).

You'll also find info about us, our profiles and links to our sites and our books. These are some of the best historical romances out there today. Once you're done browsing, pay our sites a visit and catch up with our latest titles.

So make sure you tuck this sheet away, and take it home with you. ;)

Authors from top to bottom: Tracy Cooper-Posey, Ruby Storm, Kathleen Coddington, Solange Ayre.
